IN presenting the work of Anne Goldthwaite in these galleries. I do not introduce a new luminary into the metropolitan heavens. Her works etched and in oils have been watched by gallery goers with keen appreciation for a number of seasons.

The rays which Anne Goldthwaite dartles are not of dazzling splendor. Hers is the kindly sparkle, the quiet badinage of a gay-spirited philosopher, whose gentle wisdom could only stem from wise generations back of her.

What masters taught her during her long stay in Paris her pictures forbear to tell. Anne Goldthwaite's work is the expression of her very self. The many masters whose work she has admired she has managed to forget. Whether she invented or where she found her surprising use of black outlines matters not at all. What matters is that it is hers and crisply expresses her piquant fondness for the world as she finds it.

Anne Goldthwaite is too philosophical to be serious and too serious to be unaccomplished. Facts are deftly and gaily touched upon in this informal chat where wits are quick and half a statement suffices. It is the lightness of touch of the well-bred Old South with the disenchanted wisdom of Paris added.
